Camp Believe — Summer

Interns will work in a coeducational, therapeutic, summer day camp for children ages 6-13, most with behavioral and emotional disabilities. Interns will have the opportunity to provide group counseling under the supervision of a licensed clinician addressing issues such as behavioral management, conflict resolution, improving peer relations, improving coping skills and self-esteem, and grief and loss. For more information visit the website at www.campbelieve.org.

Center for Autism and Related Disorders

The Center for Autism and Related Disorders at Kennedy Krieger Institute has several openings for undergraduate or graduate volunteers to help with a multi-site research intervention for non-verbal autistic children. Possible assignments include videotaping evaluations and research treatment sessions, setting up and breaking down testing rooms, filing of data, general office duties, data entry from research instruments, and other research related activities depending on time commitment, interests of the student, and the needs of the project. A minimum of 4-6 hours

Copper Ridge Institute

The Copper Ridge Institute (CRI), affiliated with the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine, is at the forefront of scientific research related to the treatment and care of those with Alzheimer's disease and other dementias. Interns will have the opportunity to assist with two intervention studies examining how (if at all) physical exercise (walking or the gym) impacts individuals suffering with dementia. Interns will have the opportunity to participate in the intervention and data collection process. CRI is also conducting two validation studies; the first on an internet based Dementia Risk Assessment, and the second on a novel assessment consisting of six computerized tests. Interns will learn how to administer various assessments and have the opportunity to assist in data collection. Depending on level of interest and prior experience interns may have the opportunity to assist with data analysis and literature reviews. Interns will be required to participate in weekly educational activities at Copper Ridge, a dementia-specific long-term care community, including Clinical Rounds, Grand Rounds, and Journal Club. Other educational opportunities are available, as well as the opportunity to assist the Education Coordinator with planning and implementing various programs. To learn more about the Copper Ridge Institute, our current research studies, faculty, and educational offerings, please visit www.crinstitute.org.

Cornerstone

Cornerstone at Johns Hopkins Bayview Medical Center is a treatment center funded by Baltimore Substance Abuse Systems. The program provides non-pharmacological, evidence-based treatment for individuals with substance abuse disorders. Some of the services offered are vocational assistance and job acquisition services, program sponsored recreational activities, coordination of care with variety of community services (i.e. medical, psychiatric, educational, housing assistance), and transportation. Cornerstone is a strengths-based, resource rich six month program of individual and group therapy which is titrated over the course of treatment depending upon the client's progress. The internship will provide knowledge about the specific addictions, the types of people who are most at risk, the symptoms, screening, and training on how to have one on one therapy sessions with clients. The internship provides students with the opportunities to have face-to-face individual sessions as well as leading group therapy sessions. You will be working with a team of 4 therapists and receiving clinical supervision from a licensed clinical professional counselor. You will get hands on experience working with a diverse client population in a dual community and research therapeutic treatment settings. If interested in taking a tour of our program and learning more about Cornerstone, please contact Jennifer Facteal at 410-550-5930 or jfacteal@jhmi.edu.
